This must be the year of the ant! We've received many calls about ants in the garden, lawn and even in homes. What can I use to stop this varmint? One home owner says they are so heavy in his dog lot that the dog can't stand still while eating.

The answer is apply diazinon (Spectracide) in accordance with directions on the label.

* * *

Aphids are appearing on cabbage, broccoli and peas. Malathion does a good job taking them off.

* * *

If birds damage peas, discarded tobacco plant bed canvas does an excellent job of protecting the peas.

* * *

Grain hay should have been harvested if top quality is to be housed. Cut grass in the boot to early bloom stage for highest quality.

* * *

This year already at least two deaths have ocurred from Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever in Virginia.

Only two ticks can carry the organism, Lone Star and American Dog. Just because one of these attaches to you doesn't mean you will get the disease. Only a few are carriers. The important thing is to remove the tick as quickly as possible – simply pull him off. Children playing out of doors can be careless in checking their bodies for ticks. A thorough check should be made at least once a day.

* * *

Watch for the white butterfly flitting about in your garden. These flying insects are depositing eggs on cabbage, broccoli and other cole crops. For the home gardener, the most effective control of the imported cabbage worm or cabbage looper is bacillus thurengensis sold as Dipel, Bactrol or Thuricide.

This spring several have said its a waste of time to put sevin on cabbage. That is a very correct statement. Use a material developed to control the insect.

You'll be reading about and seeing the low volumn trickle irrigation system is use in the years ahead. They work well in home gardens where there is usually a limited water supply.

There are several on the market. Ideally a pressure gauge should be on the pipe or hose at the faucet to monitor pressure. Some manufacturers claim the water oozes from the hose while others claim there is a trickle.

This spring at the Hort farm, Virginia Tech, they tested the Perma-Rain E-1 trickle emitters on strawberries. The emitters, each delivering one gallon of water per hour, are spaced two feet apart in the center of the united row of berries. Therefore, a row of 120 feet long requires 60 emitters or a total of 60 gallons per hour. These emitters give a constant flow even on sloping land at any water pressure between 20 and 60 pounds per square inch.

A three row system, each 120 feet long, complete, sells for about $120.00. It uses only three G. P. M. well water and could serve an acre of crops. This is accomplished by moving the three lines every four hours during hot weather.
